nursery rhymes and read aloud. Your child’s first bookshelf should include a mix of stories and non-fiction books.

Your parent educator can recommend good-quality books and help you set up your child’s first bookshelf. You can also find stories and books are special.

Every time you read together it’s like an interaction.

Imagery helps.

Reading magazines, newspapers, or

Learning to read is fun. Be a good model. Your baby will follow your lead.

Your baby may not understand the words you read, but he or she can notice how you express yourself when you read.

Your child gets the most out of books when you show them how important reading is to you.

Learn new words.

Learn about the flow of language.

Recognize pictures and words that go together.

Recognizing old words will help your baby.

Reading aloud will help your baby.

When your baby hears you talk, he or she learns so much about language development. It helps them develop the “grammar” they need to talk.

It also helps him hear how to put the “units” together.

The best time to start reading to your child is in the birth. Really? He or she will begin to feel about reading.

Reasons to Read to Your Baby

Parents, Teachers.

PARANToudt
Parent-Child Interaction | 622

Reading aloud will help your baby:

- Gain a feeling of warmth and security.
- Learn about your family’s values.
- Understand how he feels.
- Learn how others feel.
- Be able to tell stories when he is older.
- Be able to put things together.
- Expand his imagination.
- Improve his memory.
- Read aloud will help your baby.

Reading books together fills all those needs. Reading together fills all those from you. Reading together fills all those with you. He likes to hear your voice and he likes to learn things spend time with you. He likes to hear his world. He learns about objects, routines, people, and places.

Reading books can help your child understand information in a fun way. Stories are great because they give him his curiosity is always growing, and he realizes that stories are interesting.

Thinking skills.

Social and emotional skills.